

Red-anther or Silvertop Wallaby-grass Joycea pallida

Flowers: October to March. H 30cm x Seed heads to 1m.

Wallaby-grasses adds great charm to any bushland garden or rockery, with many species found across the sandbelt. Good at adapting to their immediate conditions; & will form small tufts to medium size tussocks if conditions are ideal. Prefers well drained soils in full sun to part shade. Most species flower in spring through to summer & some in autumn. Seed heads can be white & snowy white and fluffy at maturity, producing many seeds. Can self sow fairly readily if mulch is not too deep. Drought tolerant but thrive on extra watering. Cutting back after summer tidies the tussock & will promote new growth
